Overview

This sparkling wine from the province of Treviso, in the Northern Italian region of Veneto, is light to medium-bodied and meant to be consumed in its youth to enjoy its liveliness and freshness, most commonly as an aperitif.

Vinification and Maturation

Once the glera grapes have been harvested, they are transported to the winery where specially designed machinery presses the grapes very gently so that only the free-run juice from the heart of the grape is extracted.

Food Pairings

The acidity in Prosecco will cut through any cream sauce or cheese, while the nutty almond flavor pairs excellently with salads, fried appetizers, and appetizers of nutty-flavored cheeses, such as Gouda or cheese balls made with nuts.
